Welcome from Roma Support Group

We want to bring you information, reflections, arguments and discussion about the issues that face Roma communities in the UK. The Roma Support Group has developed over the last 18 years into a major service agency working for and with Roma communities, mainly in London. We run advice and advocacy sessions; education support programmes (including early years support) for children and families; a Roma Support and Engagement Programme (including tailored staff training); and an arts and culture programme. RSG has been able to develop work on Roma advocacy and mediation, community engagement, and also in policy and information provision. This e-bulletin is one manifestation of these developments.

EDUCATION: A ROMA PERSPECTIVE

So, another handbook and 'resource' about Roma children? Well – no! This short report (at 25 pages), imaginatively and attractively presented, is almost all based on how Roma students and ex-students and Roma teachers and parents, think about and experience learning. It includes recollections from grandparents about what it was like for Roma children in Polish schools in the 1950s; from Roma parents who were students in London schools twenty years ago; and from Roma young women and men about what's important, and upsetting, for them in schools today. And from these experiences, the report is full of ideas about how schools and staff in schools can think about their existing practices, and whether they are supporting, or discouraging, Roma students and their families. Ascription is dealt with – the preparedness to declare to the school authorities that 'yes, we are Roma'....or 'I am white European'. Children's first arrival into a British school, after little or no formal education in the country of birth, is considered – and what's best for the child (and the family) in those difficult and stressful days. And how some Roma parents think British schools are so much better placed to support and help Roma children prosper, than schools in Eastern Europe. And finally, a page of the 'top ten tips' for teachers by Roma students.....

Arthur Ivatts, the highly respected and vastly experienced educationalist, has written a brief forward for the report. He says that he thinks the publication is important for two reasons; first, that schools are keen to respond to new pupils, especially those from different backgrounds and with a distinct heritage, and so are open to views and opinions of those students and their families. And secondly, the publication is built upon the strength of Roma voices – young and older, female and male, teacher and student. He commends it to be read and used.

As Arthur Ivatts says in his introduction:

It must be sheer music for any school to hear a migrant child say "here education is much better. You are like a flower that is allowed to grow here. You are not contained." It would be so reassuring to the moral nature of our society if these beautiful words were whispered into the ears of tabloid journalists.

Roma Support Group intends to add to the resource with new and additional pages; we'll keep you updated. Download the publication here:

Briefing paper

Non inclusion of Roma, Gypsy and Traveller communities in local strategies developed to guide the allocation of European funding in England, 2014 – 2020

The story of European funding that has been earmarked for Roma communities in Central & East European counties, but has ended up either in personal bank accounts or being used for completely different beneficiaries, has been frequently told. The similar story in the UK, and in England, has been less researched. For the last two years, Roma Support Group – with other NGOs from the Gypsy and Traveller sector - has been trying to ensure that Roma are able to benefit from the estimated £6bn that will be spent in the UK under the 2014-2020 European Structural & Investment funding programmes – most notably, the European Social Fund (ESF) and European Regional Development Fund (ERDF) funding streams. This funding is not new to the UK; there is plenty of experience as to how to use European funding to support training initiatives, to be directed to those workers and ex-workers with the greatest difficulty of getting (back) into work, and to support local communities and groups trying to overcome exclusion and discrimination within the labour market.

The UK government took a decision that the European funding until 2020 be used according to priorities determined at a 'sub-regional' level by new agencies called Local Enterprise Partnerships (known as LEPs). These are new, private sector-led quangos, with a remit to draw up local priorities, and so develop programmes that are relevant to the industries and workers in these areas.

The briefing paper available here, has been the subject of research by Roma Support Group into the priorities of the 39 LEPs in England. We find that in only four areas is there any mention of Roma as potential beneficiaries. It is therefore highly unlikely that the UK will be able to rise to the challenge that Europe has for all member states to utilise this programme of European funding to take steps to further Roma integration.

The research was presented to a recent meeting of the DCLG Gypsy, Roma, Traveller liaison group, and we've now updated the original briefing paper; read the update here.

Consultation responses

Welsh Government: a call for proposals for a migrant Roma strategy in Wales

We carried the news of the Welsh government consultation in our last issue. The minister, Lesley Griffiths AM, leading the consultation was clear about her initial thoughts; that despite being the first EU nation to respond to the challenge of developing national Roma integration strategies, she said:

I have listened to stakeholders who have called for a dedicated strategy for migrant Roma, though I am not yet convinced such a strategy is necessary to improve the lives of the Roma community.

In common with five other NGOs, Roma Support Group made a submission to the Welsh government. You can read it here.

https://drive.google.com/a/romasupportgroup.org.uk/file/d/0B2lw1_Krq5gnb00zeklEM3JaaGs/view

The Welsh government responded to all the responses last month; it appears to be a very fair and comprehensive summary of what was said by the whole range of respondents. You can see the report here. Whatever the outcome, we believe that the Welsh government has shown itself to be much more open and responsive to the Roma presence in Wales, than the UK government is to Roma communities in England.

The extent of Roma integration in Glasgow – contrasting views

The Glasgow Evening Times carried an article in January about the arrival of a delegation of European cities to Glasgow, arranged by a trans-national aspect of the EU. You can read it here. It might have been a well-intentioned piece of ‘civic boosterism’; but it raised issues that many Roma activists and non-Roma supporters have worried about. What do we mean by ‘Roma integration’? And what do we mean by ‘Roma leadership’? Do Roma NGOs, or voluntary groups, have to prioritise delivering services or promoting Roma self-organisation? What does the oft-used phrase ‘nothing about us without us’ mean in the context of Roma settlement and voice in the UK (or elsewhere in Europe) and the agenda of local municipal leaderships? We re-print Eva Kourova’s response to the Evening Times article. Eva is a paid worker for a Roma Youth Project in Glasgow who has been an active campaigner on Roma rights in Glasgow for ten years; she’s written this in her personal capacity. She thinks this is a vital issue; as she explained to us recently,

Only this week I heard a phrase on Czech Radio that, “Roma parents need to get to understand that education for their children is the core.” Instead what should have been said, in my opinion, is that, “we need to make sure that our (Czech) education system is inclusive and focus our efforts on working with Roma parents to learn to trust the institution.”

Here’s Eva’s response:

I have always been a great supporter of community development and I know that Roma people are as capable as any other migrant group to settle and integrate in the new society and live a prosperous life. But what really bugs me is the fact that we hold transnational conferences and meetings regarding Roma integration, we spent time on creating strategies to Roma integration and we peer educate each other but in the same time we totally exclude the Roma people from this exercise. The parameters that determined Glasgow as a successful case study to me are therefore fake, because with true integration comes power, and with power come resources. To me if Glasgow was to be a lead expert on Roma integration, it would have to be prepared to give the power back to the Roma people themselves and have a strategy in place on how to support the Roma people to be able to use the power and resources in theirs and in others benefit. Just now Roma people don't have access to resources and have no powers over their general wellbeing which makes them more and more vulnerable and powerless. I don't think that Glasgow really needs specially designed projects targeting Roma people if the outcome of those will be ultimately Roma disadvantage on one side and power and resources on the other – even if the power and resources would be aimed at Roma communities. This I consider to be the biggest gap that needs to be addressed in order for Glasgow to be truly able to call itself a lead expert on Roma integration.

The people that use media as a tool to spread a message of Glasgow being successful in Roma integration couldn't therefore be further from the truth. Glasgow focuses the majority of its effort and resources on providing an integrated service to Roma families in Govanhill, a 16,000 resident area about a mile south of the city centre. Police, social work, health, education, employment service providers – they all work together to provide an integrated service to the supposedly 3,000 Roma residents living in the area. It is this number that brings additional resources to the area. Other localities are not as lucky as they never got this official 'number stamp' which truly determines where effort and energy will be spent. The Polish Roma community in Clydebank is a victim of this and they already start to feel the burden of Govanhill on their shoulders. Both these communities have been present in Scotland for over 10 years now, yet one is under constant surveillance of service providers, whilst the other is completely abandoned by the same people that claim to represent a city that is exceptional in Roma integration. If Glasgow was to be what it claims, then the Govanhill obsession would have to be addressed and all Roma communities supported. The current Glasgow Roma integration strategy therefore creates fraction amongst the Roma people and reinforces conflict and jealousy within the Roma groups that are faced with a prospect of fighting for resources and power. This gap will have to be addressed by Glasgow, in order to become a true lead expert on Roma integration.

Coming from a not-for-profit organisation background, I would also like point to another significant gap that the current strategy is marginally overseeing, but acknowledging nevertheless. The power struggle is not just amongst Roma groups or between Roma and practitioners. The disintegration also exists between non-governmental organisations (NGOs) and the city; the NGOs are widely referred to as a front line development rather than delivery service that works directly with Roma people and is largely concerned with the Roma leadership and active citizenship. Those topics are interesting for the city and the city recognises that the role of those organisations is crucial as it is understood that integrated service delivery will not resolve the real issue that Roma people in Glasgow have – lack of leadership figures. The current Roma integration strategy is largely represented by service delivery oriented individuals and the lack of Roma leadership won't be resolved by the current strategy unless lead NGOs are integrated into the movement. This disintegration makes the current strategy extremely vulnerable and this antagonises the two groups to work together as a team which doesn't look good on an international level. Those are the sore spots – the disintegration of the current integration strategy of Glasgow that in my opinion will have to be addressed sooner rather than later. An image without a core is ultimately prone to be discovered as a fake and ridiculed for being shallow.

Gypsy, Roma & Traveller children in the Welsh school system: promoting equality and tackling racism – a toolkit for teachers and practitioners \(Simbo, Bennett & Pidcock: Show Racism the Red Card in Wales; February 2016\)

This is a wonderful resource. The authors make clear its ambitions: to reduce racism against Gypsy Roma Traveller (GRT) pupils in schools; to support a curriculum which has relevant to all pupils, including GRT students; to provide a happy and relevant school experience for GRT young people; to build good relationships with GRT parents and the wider communities; and to support GRT students to feel greater confidence in the schools they attend. It has 56 pages packed with information, attractively presented and coded, and covering both Gypsies, and Travellers, and Roma communities and histories. It deals with the everyday (transition from primary to secondary), the essential (equality law and the framework of law) and the difficult (“be mindful of cultural dissonance”). The publication has loads of tips from professionals working in schools, and with children, as well as ideas for class based activities, and issues to reflect on. And it’s based upon the experience of Gypsy, Roma, Travellers in Wales – but obviously not limited to Wales.

Read it with our own recent publication; they fit together beautifully. To open it, click here.

England’s most disadvantaged groups: Gypsies, Travellers and Roma (Equality & Human Rights Commission; March 2016)

The EHRC has produced what it calls four ‘spotlight reports’ on demographic groups who are the most disadvantaged in England. These reports look at the position of asylum seekers and refugees; people with learning disabilities, homeless people and Gypsies, Travellers and Roma. This is in marked contrast to the Commission’s five yearly report, produced last October, called Is Britain Fairer? This report managed to marginalise the experience of Gypsy, Roma, Travellers solely to experiencing stigma, bias and hostility. In over 120 pages, the only other point that the EHRC made, almost incidentally, was that the UK (government) had failed to make any progress on four of the steps aimed at fighting discrimination set out in the 2011 framework for National Roma Integration Strategies.

This very short report – five pages of text, three pages of references – reviews the main issues of statistically observable disadvantage for Gypsy, Roma and Traveller. Readers of this newsletter won't be surprised by any of the material; you might be surprised how limited the material is. Educational disadvantage is reduced to the “attainment gap”, at reception stage and at 16; exclusion rates; GRT children being “subject to bullying”; and head teachers complaining about not being able to access resources. The huge issue of housing for Roma communities is not mentioned; and for Gypsy and Traveller populations, it is minimally dealt with under ‘work and standard of living’. There is nothing about language issues that underlay so much of the Roma access to services; and nothing about how migrant worker status has meant a denial of access to benefits and work through changes made by DWP.

It's available here.

How to make a permanent residence application \(Colin Yeo, Free Movement blog\)

We have encouraged Roma who have been in the UK for over five years to consider confirming their presence to apply for permanent residence. Our friends at the AIRE Centre have run workshops about permanent residence throughout the country. And now one of the most attentive and informed lawyers, Colin Yeo, has written a blog which clearly and carefully explains how to make an application.

The contents are:

- What is permanent residence?
- How do I get permanent residence?
- Automatic nature of permanent residence

- Combining different qualifying activities for permanent residence
- Residence prior to the Citizens Directive
- Retained rights for EU citizens and family members
- Permanent residence not necessarily permanent
- Making a permanent residence application
 - Do I need to use the official EEA(PR) form to apply for permanent residence?
 - What evidence do I need to include in a permanent residence application?
- Naturalisation as a British citizen
- What should I do if my permanent residence application is refused?

Recent news from and about the Department for Education

National Funding Formula – a consultation until 17 April 2016

The DfE has made proposals for a change in the way that schools will be funded. It is unclear what the impact that these changes will have, but the equality analysis of the consultation papers makes reference to the needs of Gypsy, Roma, Traveller pupils – and suggests that the changes would improve funding to support GRT pupils more effectively. We are unable to comment on these claims. But we think that it's important that as many people as possible look at the proposed changes in detail, and respond to the consultation.

The consultation papers are available here: The equality assessment is here; and the reference to GRT pupils is on page 9 (#15).

The consultation response form is available here. The consultation closes on 17 April 2016.

GRT stakeholder group

We make no apology for highlighting this again. In our last issue, we carried a three page statement arguing why the group should continue. We highlight above the possible changes to the way that schools are funded. This would be an item that could be considered by this stakeholder group. However, as it is not meeting, the DfE will not be able to discuss these proposed changes with representatives and stakeholders connected with Gypsy, Roma, Traveller students and families who might be affected by the changes. We are able to give you the response of a government minister to questions that Baroness Whitaker – as many will know, an active supporter of Gypsy, Roma, Traveller rights - has asked about the future of the stakeholder group. We are very concerned that this suggests that the government has every intention of closing this only consultative mechanism down. Read the minister's reply here:
